THE NEW WORLD OF WORK

The new world of work is accelerating organisational transformation. Workplaces today are more complex requiring higher levels of agility, adaptation, innovation and creative problem-solving. Progressive organisations and leaders are reimagining and reinventing how they work. They are recognising that in order to be robust, resilient, relevant and ready for the future they must enfranchise and empower their people to liberate the enterprising talent within their ranks in the service of creating value for the organisation, its customers and its ecosystem. This imperative is fundamentally redesigning the worker-employer relationship.

Globally this has led to fierce competition for talent. Employees are looking for employers who will support their learning and development needs, professional growth and career aspirations. People are reevaluating their relationship with work and the kinds of organisations in which they wish to work. Consequently, new models of work are emerging which embrace purpose, meaning, creativity, well-being, autonomy, flexibility, sustainability - replacing the industrial model where people were treated more like automatons. Employees are being seen less as 'resources' that must conform to rigid role descriptions within rigid organisational structures and more as whole humans who have depth and range of talent, ideas, emotions, experiences and aspirations with which they can make unique contributions to the organisation.

There is a massive opportunity for organisations to become an employer of choice by demonstrating their commitment to their people by:

- ▶ Investing in them
- ▶ Empowering them
- ▶ Liberating them

At the same time organisations are realising the need to be adaptable, innovative and creative if they are to survive and thrive in the new world of work. Smart organisations are using the disruption of this decade as a catalyst for transformation and renewal.

ENTER THE INTRAPRENEURIAL ORGANISATION

The intrapreneurial organisation is the new model of organisational design that finds and liberates the talent in its ranks. This kind of organisation turns employees into intrapreneurs. Their culture, leadership and people development sets them apart as the organisation of the future. They have taken the bold move to place the employee at the centre by inviting talented people to live and work with purpose.

Organisations have discovered that investing in technology does not result in workplace productivity and innovation without a commensurate investment in people. Developing people to be intrapreneurs is a business-critical activity.

“ When people flourish within an organisation there is increased productivity, creativity and innovation. ”

The intrapreneurial organisation puts intrapreneurs, at the heart of the organisational change and transformation journey. Intrapreneurs are enterprising employees who proactively create value for the organisation to strengthen its fortunes and its future.

Using intrapreneurs to solve organisational challenges, serve customers more effectively and make optimal use of resources has a fundamental advantage. It ensures that the people who really understand the complex web of interconnections across the organization that encompasses people, resources, and processes, are the ones actually solving the problems. It makes sense to engage the people who are already working within the system because they are, after all, well-positioned to bring their depth of insight and understanding to the situation.

THE JOURNEY TO BECOMING AN INTRAPRENEURIAL ORGANISATION

Organisations can be at different levels of readiness for intrapreneurialism which is reflected in their culture. Each level is identified by certain qualities as well as specific needs when it comes to advancing to the next level as explained below.

THE REGULATED ORGANISATION

is so highly bureaucratic that their people are unable to innovate as there is no room to move to effect positive change. Intrapreneurial talent is trapped in bureaucratic structures. The leaders of the organisation do not see the need for it. Indeed, it is even seen as a potential drain on limited resources so they live with the status-quo. The consequences for the organisation typically are that they lose good staff, lose important contracts, customers or revenue streams and ultimately the business fails. The first step for an organisation at this level is to make a decision to change.

THE FRUSTRATED ORGANISATION

is one which knows that there is enormous untapped potential locked up in their ranks but because of its highly systematised processes there are limited opportunities to liberate these resources. Such organisations may talk about transformation or change and it may even get a mention in the strategic plan but they are not giving it enough priority to bring any traction. The risk is that they are in danger of going backwards and becoming a regulated organisation. They need to make a commitment to prioritising intrapreneurialism and then actively supporting it.

THE ASPIRING ORGANISATION

is in the process of transitioning to the kind of organisation that will be well positioned for the uncertainties of a disruptive, VUCA world. They are in the process of identifying and prioritising innovation opportunities and readying their workforce for the next step in their organisational progression. The challenge is to maintain commitment to change and innovation under difficult circumstances. The organisation's leaders need to support transformation initiatives and be prepared to invest resources in successfully navigating the transition knowing that the rewards will be well worth it.

THE ELEVATED ORGANISATION

sees change as the new normal and so prioritises resources for maintaining the momentum for innovation. Such organisations are characterised by the open channels of communication which enable fresh thinking and great ideas to bubble up and contribute to innovative outcomes and practices. They have a workforce with high levels of engagement and empowerment. As such, this organisation has democratised its workforce participation. The leaders invest in their peoples' development at all levels so they have a flexible workforce who can step up to solve complex problems creatively. They have found ways of unlocking the potential, talent and enterprising spirit within their ranks so that great ideas can be accessed and implemented to create new value. The rewards are the tangible outcomes and ROI that the organisation is experiencing. They are already doing well and just need a belief in their capacity to take their efforts to the next level.

THE INTRAPRENEURIAL ORGANISATION

is an industry leader and shining example of adaptability and vision. They have transformed themselves into a future focused, future-ready organisation where people are rejuvenated and inspired and consistently use their intrapreneurial talent and creativity to solve problems that deliver outcomes beyond expectations. Intrapreneurialism is an embedded organisational trait and is seen as everyone's responsibility. This organisation thrives on the opportunity to create value for their customers, clients and their broader ecosystem. Talented people are attracted to this culture because they know they will have the opportunity to continue their development. The results are revenue growth and profitability (even in difficult times); a loyal, adaptable, engaged and energised workforce proactively solving problems; and loyal customers who are brand ambassadors for the organisation.
